I want to share some wonderful news! Christopher Newport University has been chosen from more than 2,500 institutions to be featured in The Princeton Review publication The 367 Best Colleges: 2012 Edition due out in August. Our selection is particularly gratifying since The Princeton Review gives great weight to the results and comments collected from student surveys.

“Only about 15 percent of the colleges in the nation are in this book,” according to Robert Franek, senior V.P. publishing for The Princeton Review. “In our opinion, these are ‘the crème of the crop’ institutions for undergraduates in America.”

Of course, this recognition is only possible through the tireless effort and dedication of our superb faculty and staff who sprint through the day raising the standard of excellence that defines CNU. It is through your hard work that we have transformed Christopher Newport University, and our students have come to cherish this very special place.

Our success is a team effort, and we share in this achievement. Our students, faculty and staff are among the best in the world, and with this acknowledgement there is cause to celebrate. However, our work is not done. We will continue to get better and better. It is our commitment as members of the CNU community that each day we strive to do more to make our campus and the world a better place.

I want to express my deepest appreciation to all of you. Congratulations.
