

Nicholas Huber graduated from the CNU English program with a concentration in Creative Writing and a minor in Sociology. While at CNU, Nick contributed music reviews to the Captain's Log, co-hosted a radio show on WCNU, and was a founding member of the club Citizens of the World. He is the winner of both a Currents Editor's Choice Award and the 2006 Sancetta Book Award. His senior thesis, "The Language of Balkan Mythologies," was presented at PAIDEIA in May 2007. As a Peace Corps Volunteer in Kazakhstan from 2008 - 2011, his primary assignment was team-teaching with local English teachers at the secondary and college levels while collaborating on projects such as English language summer camps and after school clubs and the aggregation of an English-language library for the town of Satpaev. Nick studied Russian in Kazakhstan and was awarded an FLAS fellowship to study Bosnian/Croatian/Serbian at Indiana University's SWSEEL program in the summer of 2012. Nick is currently finishing his second year at Duke University's Ph.D. Program in Literature where his work will focus on critical theory, collective memory, exile, and the novel.
