The mental health of students across college campuses has become unfortunately less and less of a focus. While the resources for these students are available, they are rarely talked about and rarely used. This discussion is to talk about not only the issues of college students' mental health, but what could be done to help the issue.

Medieval & Renaissance Studies Lecture Series

The Medieval & Renaissance Studies Fall 2016 Lecture Series continues this Thursday, October 20 at 4:30pm in the Tribble Library Room 170. Dr. Charlotte Cartwright (Department of History) will be discussing "How to Read a Medieval Manuscript from a 13th Century Nunnery".

Thursday, October 20, 4:30 pm, Tribble Library, Room 170

Over the summer Dr. Cartwright worked on translating a medieval manuscript. Written by hand in Latin, this document is a record of the land and wealth of the nuns of Saint Amand, a monastic house in Rouen, France.

Dr. Cartwright will explain how to read medieval handwriting, discuss the translation from Latin to English, and show how the information from the document can inform historians' understanding of the 13th century.

All faculty and students are invited!
