Interim Deans Steven Breese and David Doughty have ably led, respectively, the College of Arts & Humanities and the College of Natural and Behavioral Sciences since July 1, 2009. Upon consultation with Provost Mark Padilla, I have decided that their record of achievement warrants appointment without the Interim designation, and I am pleased they have accepted my offer to serve in this new capacity.

Steven Breese's expertise is in the creative arts, specifically directing and acting, while David Doughty's scholarly expertise is in nuclear physics. They have distinguished themselves as Chairs of academic departments and both have an extensive record of participation in faculty governance and other University service. The Provost and I regularly count on Steven and David to lead initiatives and solve problems.

With these appointments, CNU now has top-notch administration in all three Colleges, as they join Robert Colvin who was appointed Dean of the College of Social Sciences in May. Please congratulate Steven and David and support them as they continue the important but difficult process of engaging faculty, staff and students to advance our mission of liberal arts excellence.
